Raining Fish

For the last two hundred years, the village of Yoro, Honduras has experienced an unusual yearly phenomena: Raining Fish!

Once or twice a year after a massive rainfall, villagers will find hundreds of tiny fish flopping around in the streets. The citizens of Yoro collect the fish and thank God for the provision. A team of scientists from National Geographic observed this event but were unsure as to the cause. One theory is that water spouts carry the fish from far away. The more simple theory is that the heavy rains force the fish up from underground rivers. Many of the fish were found to be blind, so this seems possible.

As a church-planter and fisher of men, I can't help but think of how much simpler that would make things, if converts just fell from the sky! I suppose we will all have to just continue trusting in the Lord of the harvest, who is sure to provide. After Peter's preaching at Pentecost, 5,000 received Christ in one day, so I believe that God will also do great things in the country of Honduras.

Gospel to Brazil

We have a very short amount of time left before we get to meet our daughter. In the meantime, God has blessed us with many good meetings. A church in Ohio was kind enough to let us stay in their prophet's chamber for a few days. While there we got to be a part of their yearly event of preparing booklets of John and Romans. This year they turned out 10,000 portions of the Bible in Portuguese and another 1,000 in English! Please pray that many Brazilians would be reached with the gospel!

We are encouraged by the burden for missions that we are seeing in the churches we visit, and we love knowing that so many people are praying for us. We can't wait to be on the field soon! Thank you for your prayers for us and for Honduras.
